INTRODUCTORY.

Our two cities, New Albany and Jeffersonville, felt the full force of the "Financial Panic" and the "Hard Times" that has overspread our whole country for nearly the past three years. Added to this depression was the discovery of large fields of Natural Gas surrounding and contiguous to the Commercial City of Indianapolis, and the consequent taking away from our midst of several large enterprises with numbers of skilled workmen and their families. At one time it was thought that fully one-fourth of the houses in New Albany were vacant. At this writing it is fair to say the financial panic has well nigh spent its force, the storm clouds are breaking away and passing off. A halt has been called in the removal of manufacturing; old plants are again starting up, and many of our vacant houses have found tenants. A gentle and effective reaction has taken place as the following figures will show:

The New Albany department of the Directory in 1892 contained 10,993 names, from which was estimated by a multiplier of 2½ for each name, a population of 27,482.

The Jeffersonville department contained 5,886 names, in like manner giving a population of 14,715.

The Directory herewith presented contains for New Albany 10,470 names, making on the same basis as heretofore a population of 26,175; a decrease in names of 523, and of population 1,307.

The Jeffersonville department contains 5,582 names, making the population 13,955, a decrease in names of 304, and of population 760.

This is far from being a loss of one-fourth of the population as many dependents had it. In point of fact, the difference is but a little over four per cent. This loss in population is now being recovered and with it something like the old time activity in manufactures and commerce.

The publishers return thanks to the patrons of the Directory, commending their courage and hopefulness, and hoping to enjoy with them the era of prosperity he believes to be at hand.
